

Allow me to introduce myself to you briefly, my name is Libna Hashem, I have recently graduated from high-school and I would like to apply for a bachelor degree in Business at King's University. I believe that business has a unique power that gives it a special type of authority around the world. The reasons why I choose to study a business degree, because I aspire to become a successful business lead, and the world of business has always intrigued me. The major reason is my belief that business plays a key role in the development of the world at different aspects, and I would like to be a part of this wonderful development; full of ambition and passion.

Personally, I love reading as well as real-life practice and experiencing everything new. The huge development that occurred in Saudi Arabia during the last few years has confirmed my choice of pursuing a career in business. I am looking forward to learning from a wide range of modules the breadth of areas associated with running businesses such as ethics, entrepreneurship and business analysis. I have been interested in learning about leadership styles as well as market segmentations, and finance. I love the way that numeracy, literacy and other skills are utilized in practice-based scenarios and problem-solving in the study of Business, preparing me for pursuing a successful career.

I look forward to deepening my understanding of budgeting, project management, time-management and theoretical knowledge of organizations and the behavior of those who inhabit them. I am keen to learn more about the legal and economic side of Business. Being absorbed in this wealth of learning will enable me to create my own brand in terms of employability, as I realize that businesses occupy economic, political and social spaces that interact in a complex web competitively, on the global stage.

Throughout reading and searching and definitely school and personal life, I have developed some beneficial skills. For example, I have learned about the sociological knowledge of quantitative and qualitative research methods through reading, which has provided me with grounding in conducting e.g. training needs analyses and feedback research. I am able to critically analyze evidence, assess the reliability and validity of data and draw trustworthy conclusions. Also, through the day-to-day news, I learned that the business world is a rapidly changing globally, technologically, and environmentally which makes me even more fascinated to enhance my communication skills and creative solution-based thinking.

I would like to study Business because in the future I aim to be an independent woman, in charge of my own. My desire to learn new things and work out of my comfort zone; as well as testing myself with new experiences excites me. I am ready for this challenge in my life, and know that I will work hard, thrive and develop as a result of undertaking a degree in Business, I would love contribute and give back to the community and the university.

Sincerely,

Libnah Hashem
