

Politics have appeared centuries ago in ancient cultures as it was mentioned by a variety of philosophers and thinkers. First, I would like to introduce myself to you, I am Joud Tayeb, a newly high school graduate who is looking forward to study abroad. I am applying at King's College London to obtain my bachelor degree in Politics. Second, the reason why I choose King's College London is because I have explored my options by searching online, looking at the reviews, and asking those who studied the same major abroad, and I was advised that no better place offering a Politics program better than your esteemed university. Further, this shows that King's College London has a great reputation in which it can provide me with the knowledge I seek along with the experience required for the field of Politics.

Another question you might ask is why am I choosing this major? I have been told that it is complicated, and others have described politics as a huge game. Well, it all started when I was a child who had a number of unanswered questions in her head. I was wondering why there is a guy on TV talking about a situation happening in another country mentioning people we do not know and most importantly why were my parents so interested. Then, I saw the newspaper and I was curious about it so there was the point when I started reading about politicians and political situations of other countries. More and more questions ran in my head and through my journey of looking for answers, my interest in Politics became more than just a passion. It became a dream, a goal, and a life mission for me to build my career in the political field. The reasoning behind that is because politics serves a greater good and it is one of the approaches that made our lives better, aligned, and more peaceful.

In addition, knowing what I aspire to become and the major I desire since I was a child has helped me to grow and develop my personality along with the skills required for this field. For example, I have developed my communication skills in writing and researching, as well as in public speaking and practicing presentation skills. Furthermore, since social media plays a major role in our lives today, I have developed the right way of using social media and how to define my audience and understand them. Moreover, some other skills I have been working on to develop are problem solving, time management, discipline, negotiation skills and crisis management. In my personal opinion, I believe that the field of politics is noble yet can be dangerous due to the effect it holds on the world. Therefore, certain skills need to be acquired and I trust that King's College London is the right place for me to acquire and develop these skills and knowledge.

I am a confident, ambitious, hardworking, and a self-independent person who is always looking forward to becoming the best version of herself. I believe that knowledge is the key to success as well as the right use of this knowledge is the success itself. I am full of hope that you will take my application to obtain my bachelor degree in Politics at your respected institution into consideration. I will be delighted and honored to be taught by the expert professional faculty at King's College London.

Sincerely,
Joud Tayeb
