Since my early childhood I was the one who liked to take the place of being the leader, I always like to be the manager, team captain or anyone who was in charge. Imagine being a 9 year old watching home alone and instead of being curious if what's going to be Kevin's punishment you would be curious how he's going to put the fight. Since my dad owns a business he made me help him with deals that concern financial management, it made become more aware of business deals and what made me have more experience is the book 'rich dad, poor dad' it made discuss more about financial management with my older mates.

After volunteering in King Saud University for the E-Marketing I got more knowledge about marketing and about owning a huge business especially after having a long talk with owner of the app Haraj 'yousef alrashidi', it sparked an interest to this day I have not lost in the captivating world of the E-Marketing. Also being a member of King saud university distinguished and talented students program gave me a lot of skills from their training courses, I gained skills needed to be more independent and to be a better leader. I am also a member of SYAG which is one of the greatest enterprise that showcases the potential of the Saudi youth and provide opportunities in organising, volunteer and internships.

I've chosen England for my future as I prefer to study in English and I want the opportunity to meet with an international environment. The business sector is a world I would flourish in and going to university is the key to my future. Millions and billions of risks are taken everyday in the business world sometimes they actually pay off and sometime the sadly don't. If I was awarded this opportunity I can personally guarantee I am a risk worth taking.
