

As a kid my mother made sure I grew up in a house filled with love yet more importantly, filled with virtuous morals and right principles. She has always taught me discipline and goodwill are vital to one's character. As I grew up, psychology books have always been a great interest of mine, guiding me to see the right curation of the reasoning behind one's actions. I then moved to books of law such as "My Own Words" by Ruth Bader Ginsburg. The more I read the farther I became from making an impaired judgment. The monumental meaning these books carried gave me more delight than anything in the world but law could do. I then realized, attaining a law degree was only right. My constant devotion towards legislation turned me into an embodiment of social conscience. Studying law will help me gain a deeper understanding of the rules of conduct that constitute our society.

I understand that when resolving a case, appealing to both logic and cognition in equal proportion is vital. For that reason, I attended an investments and acquisitions course held by American University of Cairo. The course taught me how to use analytics to ensure a strategy is prosperous, and the importance of communication between client and consultant. This course supported my practice of interpreting the right claims, and delivering an argument that will display a client fairly.

Throughout highschool I enrolled in a significant number of Model United Nations conferences. Whereas I learned how to read through hefty loads of research and perceive only crucial information that supports the issue I'm representing. MUN's opened my eyes to the prominence of fighting dearly for a cause of injustice whether it was racial justice or a refugee crisis, etc. I wish to delve deeper in the world of legal matters to ensure an environment rich of hope for future generations.

Different types of activities have played a significant role in my development since they've enhanced my learning process in many arenas. I've volunteered in assisting an organization to plan events for bright children who are characterized with autism. I find giving back to my community essential. Nonetheless, I successfully completed 100 hours, tutoring children who are in need of so with their school work. These contributions taught me the importance of representing a concern for justice and peace irrespective of gender, race or religion.

I vow to exceed immense effort to build myself to reach a configuration of intellect that allows me to excel in the field of law regardless of any obstacle. I strongly believe that your institution will provide me with a resourceful environment that will support my studies. I hold a great capacity to face this life in its terrible glory and open my arms for people in need of my legal support despite what they endured. Indeed, I will continue to make sure no voices fall overheard, establishing a better society with the gift your institution will bestow upon me.
