

It's always been a dream of mine to study abroad, because I always loved the idea of seeing what other cultures I can learn about and what I can contribute from my culture to wherever I go. I feel that studying abroad may help me gain experience, whether it is living independently, seeing what other cultures I can learn about, seeing what I can teach others about my culture, so on and so forth.

New experiences aren't always bad, sometimes they may introduce someone to something they may have once thought was not enjoyable. For me, a fresh start in a new country I have never been to would be a bit of a scary, yet fun experience. The opportunities I can have out in the United Kingdom would help me see clearly what I could be missing and find myself in order to feel I have fully accomplished what I have strived for all my life.

I feel that if I study abroad, I will have an opportunity to show what I can do, because I am confident I am capable of great things. I just feel I could do so much more in the field I love. Representing my family and country is also very important to me, as I know I can make my parents proud and help spread what I learn studying abroad through my country. Studying abroad will also help me learn about new cultures and teach others about my culture.

Helping Saudi Arabia's 2030 vision is also a goal of mine, because studying abroad will help me spread the knowledge I learn and teach others about the experiences I may have there. Considering I have spent 12 years studying in English, I could benefit from studying abroad. I am used to studying in English, so I could definitely fit in as a regular student wherever I go.

To conclude, I would love to study abroad, learn about other cultures I may have not seen before, gain new experiences, and have more opportunities. I know I can also help represent Saudi Arabia, and take part in its vision to make the country great.
